Having been to Hershey, PA in our prior life, we elected to stay out side town and tour Lebanon, PA. This is a historic old town and as a matter of fact, it is the oldest town we've seen. All the houses in town are really old!

Heading South we suddenly elected to cross Chesapeake Bay and experience Maryland and Delaware. After checking to see if the motor home would fit in each of them, (they said it would!), we paid for a piece of the Annapolis Bay bridge with a $4.50 toll.

Much to our surprise, these two states are quite large and we traveled for about 150 miles to the Chesapeake Bay Bridge and Tunnels. Also noted were the vast plantings of corn and soybeans. You would think you were in Iowa! I am sorry to report that we paid $1.18/gal for unleaded gas here.

The Chesapeake bridge crossing is about 17 miles long and has two bridges and two, mile long tunnels under the bay, as well as long causeways. The charge was $24 toll for the motor home! I expect voting rights on the board of directors for this much!

The temperature and humidity has been mean today. We don't expect relief until we get back home.

My trusty Nikon camera decided to retire the other day! For some unknown reason I had my old Kodak in the camera bag. One of the few things I have done right this trip, so maybe I can still send photos with the Journal.

We point the rig towards Florida tomorrow. With a little luck, maybe we can slip in and leave between hurricanes!
