HALLOWEEN Y'ALL

Continuing south to Nashville we did some visiting with friends and relatives of Bonnie's. We then proceeded souther (new word!) to Huntsville, AL. to our friend's home, where we had our ballots sent, so we could vote.

The further into the south, it seemed to be more decorated into the Halloween scene. Small towns had displays of pumpkins and straw men everywhere. Most homes had the hobgoblin fever.

Maybe we are too busy at home to pursue this theme.

We found a nice RV park at a marina in south Huntsville. It is completely in a forest of trees. The wind blew all night and it was a constant rain of acorns dropping from the trees onto the roof of the motorhome. Some sounded like loud knocks on the door! The morning brought us a lot of rain, which stopped in the afternoon.

We have no more statues to find, until Ft. Lauderdale, FL. It is planned to travel down to Atlanta, GA, and then over to Savannah, GA and then south to Florida.

Traveling thru Georgia, we observed excessive activity by State Troopers. One would set in the center divider and radar you, and then radio your car description to a bevy of other troopers who pull you over! They would stop 4 and 5 cars at a time. We loaded on unleaded at Wal-Mart for $2.26/gal ! Since leaving New York State, we haven't paid over $3/gal.

We finished off today getting lost in St. Augustine, FL, driving the MH on streets that prohibited trucks. We understood after squeezing thru a narrow street and taking off the side mirrors of two cars that were parked. In the ghetto, no less!
