HOT, HOT, HOT

The day has finally arrived. This morning we headed out for the journey to see the last Indian that was carved in Nov 2009 in Vincennes, Indiana. We thought we were done, but now we have to see this one!

The entire nation seems to be over 100 degs. And as we proceed north, we find that the dash air conditioner does not work! Great!! We sweated our way to Pahrump, NV where we stayed at a Western Horizons RV Park. Needless to say we wasted no time making a repair appointment at a RV service center. The only problem was low refrigerant. Filled up, it works again.

After visiting Bonnie's cousin's son, Wally, we headed for Las Vegas in the 110 deg heat. The dash air worked valiantly, and we finally arrived at Thousand Trails Las Vegas. We spent the afternoon and evening visiting with friends, Dick and Beth Schmidt, in their beautiful home. They invited us back the next day for movies and BBQ. We made a new friend named Martini. She is always on the lookout for a stray tidbit or two!

Tomorrow is Saturday and we have decided to take a tremendous drive to Hurricane UT., a distance of maybe 90 or so miles. We have to ease into this travel thing, you know!

It is interesting that as we grow older, the excitement of Las Vegas town does nothing for us. Been there, done that, too far to walk, too loud and noisy, too much food, etc., etc., etc.

Vegas is still busy, however bad signs are visible. New construction that was running rampant, sets idle and unfinished. Some have been dead for two years. They are either bankrupt or cannot get more money.

Something else different, is the bus system. They have all double decker busses like in London!
