HELLO TECUMSEH, YOU INDIAN YOU!

We finally reached Vincennes, IN. We noticed that it is Indiana's first city, posted on the welcome sign. I knew what street the statue was on, so we proceeded into town. So now we find that the first streets would barely accommodate a wide body Southwind and tow car! We could hardly go around a block, so we forged ahead towards the Ohio River.

Would you believe, the street we were on ran right into the statue location, and amazingly there was a wide road where we could park!

We got photos, and had to tell a lady and her son about Peter Toth. She had lived here 41 years and had never seen the statue! She felt better when I told her that he just finished it last Nov. She directed us out of the city and we went on to find a campsite.

We eventually found a site in a place called Sullivan County Lake and Park. It is a huge park on 160 acres, with shade trees, grass and wide campsites. It was so nice here that we signed for another night.

Working our schedule over we decided to travel the great distance of 50 miles to stay at a place called Racoon State Park. It is so tough being retired and travelling these long distances.

This park that we are currently staying in, has a large population of locals and they know all about the place and they each bring electric golf type carts to get around. The roads in the park are full of these carts.
