SADLY ALOHA

Saturday morning we dropped Marti off at the airport. Nancy left last Sunday, and we leave this beautiful place, this Sunday.

I hope you all enjoyed what little we could convey to you via a journal.

We hope to continue when we take our annual motor home trip to? (assuming all goes well! We don't even buy green bananas anymore!)

After we dropped Marti off, we tried to find a road to a golf course and restaurant where we once ate. It turned out to be a road from Hell that was a beach access, and was driven mostly by surfers with FWD and big tires. Our poor 2011 Buick was horrified on this rutted lava rock passage. There was no turn around for two miles! We could walk faster than we could drive!

Two or three days ago, we drove South to the Black Sand Beach. It was maybe 40-50 miles away. The traffic moves along at maybe 35 mph and it took 3 hrs. to get there, with road construction and all. We ate down there at a bar and food place and apparently I left my credit card there. I called them and the phone was not reaching them.

This is how bad the drive was---, I called the card company and cancelled the card rather than repeat the drive! At least we looked for the card the required three minutes before getting a new one. The photo above shows how beautiful the Heliconias are around here.
