WHAT'S GOING ON!

Approaching Watson Lake, YT we drove into the darkest cloud ever. The wind blew, and it started to throw window breaking hail at us. After about two miles we found refuge at a rest stop until the barrage stopped. Then this!

We pulled in for the night at the Downtown RV Park.

At 3:00 am I had to arise to tend to a low blood sugar problem, and while sitting there in the darkened motor home I observed a couple of figures skulking about, across the road by the opposite rigs. As I watched, they hopped into a pick up that pulled a fifth wheel, and lifted a large tool box out of it and carried it away! This was really awkward, being 82 yrs old and no match to confront them, no cell phone service for 911, no weapons, I was only able to watch unobtrusively.

In the morning I notified the people in the RV, and they looked and confirmed the theft, and I talked with the Park owner. He discounted it for being locals, as there is no way to fence or sell stolen items here. They only go for food and drink and coolers etc. He pinpointed a group of young late check-ins and early departers, that were headed to Alaska. He was very suspicious of them.

We left early and we had many stretches of rough road on the way to Whitehorse. After talking with various travelers we determined that the last hundred or so miles into Alaska are still bad bumpy slow driving ones. At least resting up for two days in Whitehorse will help prepare us for the journey.
