

WHAT THE HELL IS HELLS GATE?

For one thing, it is a hell of a ride down to it! Actually it is a very narrow place in the Fraser River, in BC, where elaborate fish ladders were built, to accommodate the extreme fluctuations of the water level. There is a main line railroad on each side of the gorge. Developers have made a tourist attraction of it and have a restaurant complex on one side of the gorge. There are many exhibits of the history of the river and the gorge and the railroad construction.

This view shows the restaurant complex and the fish ladders in the foreground.

When we were on the bridge across the river, we got to see two rafts full of crazy people bounce through the rapids. Apparently that is what they paid good money to do!

It is the only cable car descent into a gorge like this in North America.
